ZUDORA

In the Twenty Million Dollar Mystery

By HAROLD MACGRATH

Copyright, 1914 and 1915, by Harold MacGrath

SYNOPSIS.

Zudora is left an orphan at an early age. Her father is killed in a gold mine. Zudora and the fortune from the mine, which grows to be worth $200,000, are left in the guardianship of Frank Keene, Zudora's mother's brother, who has set himself up as a Hindu mystic and is known as Hassan Ali. He decides that Zudora must die before she can have a chance to come into possession of her money, so that it may be left to him, the next of kin. Hassan Ali sees an obstacle to his scheme in the person of John Storm, a young lawyer, for whom Zudora has taken a fancy, and he com- mands the girl to put the man out of her mind. Zudora insists that if she cannot marry Storm she will marry no one.

"Well, wait," says Hassan Ali. "I will see my first twenty cases and you can marry him; but in a single case and you must renounce him."

Zudora reveals a mystery and wins her first case—a case in which John Storm is saved from being convicted of a murder committed by Hassan Ali himself. Zudora and Hassan Ali visit Natchik Shum's house, where they discover every one who has been attempting to marry a princess. Storm, seeking Zudora, is made a prisoner. Zudora tells Natchik Shum, restores the princess to her original lover and saves Storm from death.

A hanker of diamonds tells Hassan Ali his secret. Storm informs Zudora that his life is being attempted frequently. Storm suspects Hassan Ali. Storm is arrested for stealing the diamond maker's gems, but Zudora discovers the real thieves—a pair of thieves.

The men's help employed on Storm's father's farm are fleeing because a ghost skeleton hand appears at night upon a hill near by. Storm is killed in his investigation, but Zudora learns that her uncle has employed Jimmy Bolton, a half-witted man, to steal Storm's parents. Zudora finds Bolton operating a big magic lantern and is attacked by him. Storm appears and saves her.

Hassan Ali asks Zudora to find a gem lost by two mysterious old men. Zudora sets a photograph of the gem and it burns in her hand. An old house is visited by Hassan Ali and the old men. Storm and Zudora are lured there and narrowly escape destruction when the house blows up. John McWint, endeavoring to trap and kill George Smith, is killed himself, and Smith is charged with murder. Hassan Ali conspires to have John Storm meet the same fate as McWint, and he and Storm are overcome by powerful forces. Zudora saves them, proves that McWint's own dog trapped and killed him and saves Smith from a band of lynchers.

An inventor blows up a submarine with a powerful heat ray which he sends through water. Hassan Ali sends Zudora to a photographer directly beneath the inventor's laboratory and orders the inventor to kill her. Zudora gets a warning, and her life is saved. The heat ray machine is destroyed, and the photographer, after a quarrel with Hassan Ali, is found dead in the river.

We Chang prevents Zudora's shipment with John Storm by hypnotizing her, and he and Hassan Ali attempt to smuggle her out of the country. This plot is frustrated by Storm.

Bored, Hassan Ali's double, talks in love with Zudora. Bored and Mrs. Du Val kidnap Zudora and the Van Wick child. Storm rescues them, and Hassan Ali dies.

With Hassan Ali dead Zudora is released of her pledge to solve twenty cases. She confronts, however, the greatest mystery of all, which is the mystery of her own life, and the ambition to secure the vast fortune of $200,000 left to her. This great photo serial is being shown in the leading moving picture theaters by the Thanhouser Film Corporation. Among those participating are Marguerite Booth, Mary Elizabeth Forbes, James Crane, in the new role of reporter-hero, Sidney Bracey and Frank Patterson.

On looking through her uncle's papers Zudora finds that her father left her an interest in a diamond mine, and that Storm and Bolton both lend assistance in trying to regain her possession of this estate which is being appropriated by rogues under the leadership of Mrs. Du Val. They plan to frighten Zudora so that she will run away. Putting their cunning Zudora and Howard, the mine superintendent, and put them in a private income stream.

CHAPTER XIII.

A Raid on a Madhouse.

WHEN John Storm realized that Zudora was gone, abducted in her nightgown, with only a comfortable to shield her from the cold, he was stunned. And he had laughed at her for her foolishness, her talk about evil stars.

Who could have done it? Where could they have taken her? Were the diamond people back of it?

Was this more intended to frighten Zudora or really make away with her? He was in a state of collapse and lost half a mind to start out and just hunt for the woman he loved, having neither direction nor plan of action.

He only sensed the feeling that she needed him and that he must go to her. Then his gaze happened to fall to the floor, where it rested upon an envelope.

Absentmindedly he stooped and picked it up, but without glancing at the superscription.

They might be hurting her; she might be dead. By and by he saw the address.

Who was J. W. Bruce? Why he looked for the postmark—and because he realized into life. Africa!

This envelope had been postmarked Africa. Hastily he drew out the contents and read it. It was signed by Henry Howard, the superintendent of the diamond mines.

In this letter Howard complained that he believed the rightful heir was being deprived of what was hers and that he demanded an understanding that would leave no further doubt in his mind.

That was sufficient for John. The smugglers had realized that they stood on thin ice and had struck the first blow.

And what a blow! Gentle Zudora, a princess God alone knew where, subject to threats and possibly abuse! Oh, they should pay in blood! John swore as he pictured these things in his mind.

Mrs. Ramsey came in.

"What is it?" she asked, noting the wild anger in his face.

"It's the diamond business. They've taken the first trick."

"But they didn't take the diamonds," said Mrs. Ramsey, opening her hands.

"They threw the flower pot to the floor, but did not look at the dirt. Where shall we put them? Wouldn't it be better if we deposited them at a bank?"

"We can't do that until we have established our right to them. I've got an idea. We'll hide them in the photograph machine in one of the record files. It's the last place any one would look for them. Now, I'm off to see Hunt. You sleep in Zudora's room to-night. They may come back to have another look for the stones. If any one enters shoot. Don't feel any qualms. Shoot and shoot to kill!"

"I may not shoot straight, but I'll shoot."

When Storm entered Hunt's office he found that individual calmly filing away at a key. He paid no attention to Storm until he had noticed the key to his satisfaction.

"Well?"

"Zudora's been abducted!"

"I thought maybe she would be."

"And you made no effort to prevent it?"

"My boy, could I tell just where they'd start the game? Howard is also missing. They're no fools we are dealing with. At the start they got the real owner of the mine and the superintendent. Now, what's that you've got in your hand?"

"A letter I found on the floor in Zudora's room. Moreover, it's addressed to J. W. Bruce and signed Henry Howard."

"That's something like it. So Bruce himself was mixed up in it, eh? Must feel the pinch to take a risk like this."

Hunt read the letter.

"Foul! This man Howard seems to be a white man. He probably larked when he landed and they've boxed him up somewhere. And I shouldn't be surprised if Zudora was next door. Just keep your hair on, John. They won't hurt her to any extent. They won't dare until they know they are safe. Cheer up, Storm. We'll unwind the stuff. Do you know what I'm going to do?"

"What?"

"Send Jim Baird to Africa to look over the whole business, old documents, the output, past and present, all the loose ends of the game. Meantime we'll prove around for Zudora. Wherever they have put her you can take my word for it they'll be mighty cautious for a week or so in going in that direction. Now, I know what you want to do.

"You want me to go and arrest Bruce. No, thank you. I want our friend Bruce free to come and go as he pleases. Sooner or later he'll gain courage enough to go and see how the fair captive is making out, and then we'll learn something."

"I know it's a tough job to have to sit still when the woman you love is in duress. But a single false move on our part might be fatal. These people are desperate. I've begun to get a glimpse of that fact."

"How long will we have to wait?"

"That's up in the air, my boy. You can't rush out and do the work in ten minutes. It may be weeks, even months. But in the end we'll come out on top. But I'm going to ask you on your oath not to make any move without consulting me. Promise?"

"I promise," said Storm reluctantly.

"My business is catching crooks, just as your is sending them over the route or getting them off, as the case may be. I look at this as a long game, to be played with the utmost care. Now we'll go and rest out Baird."

All the White Bird's Eyes Were at the Window.

We'll pay his expenses with a fat bonus, and he'll get a good Sunday special, as he calls them."

In Mrs. Du Val's salon there was rather an animated scene.

It appeared that Zudora was not really to be frightened by threats.

At the instigation of Dr. Mann two nurses had buffeted Zudora without success. The two women had seen tears form in the girl's eyes, but her lips had remained uncomprehendingly firm.

Hadcliffe suggested to his henchman to use a little melodrama upon Zudora—threaten her with death by the knife.

"Try it," said Mrs. Du Val. "If I know that girl she'll laugh in their faces."

"You never can tell when a spell like that will break," said Hadcliffe. "I'm for giving the idea a trial. As for Howard, let him out where he is. I know that breed."

"My suggestion is a little hunger. I accomplished far more than threats have you ever been hungry and thirsty, with those things almost within reach?"

"We'll try that later."

The henchmen came back later. To Mrs. Du Val's surprise Zudora had wilted and confessed that the gem were in the sewer.

But none of them realized that Zudora had made this confession only
